This is a transcript of text in the video titled “Has anything surprised you about working at Central Bank”.

I think how willing everyone is to help you.

Straight off the bat, like you walk in and you meet your team and everyone is straightaway kind of making sure you know what you're doing.

You know how to even just use the small things like get a locker, use the canteen.

I think I had an idea in my head that it would be a lot older, like the people who work here would be a lot older.

Kind of like that traditional, secure Irish job. That's the idea I had in my head.

But when I started, like there's a lot more young people than I expected, which is really nice because, especially in the Grad Programme, we keep in touch, and even with the older grad years, we keep in touch with them and we can do stuff outside of work.

And I think that's really nice to have that young cohort in the bank as well.

As well, I didn't know how nice the building would be. I thought offices were really gross inside usually. I was really surprised to be fair, like about,

I guess what the building looked like in real life, because my understanding of a bank is like dull and grey and it was a lot more modern and bright than I thought it would be.

I was expecting the dividers between desks.
